YOUNG ALUMNI CONTRIBUTION AWARD

AUGUST 2008

Brazil, 2008.

Juan Bossicard has shaped as a vivid example of how young alumni can contribute to AIESEC in a considerable manner immediately after they leave the organization.

Juan's leadership and stand to facilitate meaningful opportunities for his community were apparent from his first years in AIESEC. He was the one to take the lead and re-establish the local committee of ICHEC, Brussels in 2001. In its first year of existence under the leadership of Juan, the local committee produced the best results nationally. Ever since, Juan has left AIESEC and even after the start of his career in

Microsoft he has managed to provide huge amount of support. Juan has been to a large extent a major factor in the initiation and further development of the Global

"Juan Bossicard's innovative outlook, vitality and tremendous passion for our organization, makes him such an outstanding alumnus. As the global liaison between Microsoft and AIESEC, he has initiated the partnership and taken it to ever-increasing height. With his never-ending stewardship and support to AIESEC, Juan has provided inspiration for many. We couldn't be more proud of him!"

Partnership between Microsoft and AIESEC. He has done a great effort to create an internal AIESEC alumni network within the company. Even despite his demanding professional life, Juan is still extremely approachable, always available to meet members at conferences and to support any AIESEC activities, which has rated him high not only among the members, but among the alumni themselves, as well.

Juan's outstanding career in Microsoft can easily serve as a role model of how AIESEC alumni continue to impact communities. He has been an important part of the establishment of key regional community affair initiatives that has now impacted more than 2 million people across Europe, Middle East and Africa. Currently he is responsible to train and support Community Affairs Managers in nearly 50 countries.
